Today, China: children are stolen and sold to rich families without children of their own. Desperate parents abandon all they have to follow the traces of their child who has disappeared. Very young girls are sold to peasants who need help for the work in the countryside or to affluent men who want one more concubine. The work of the Policy and of a female journalist who persecute these terrible stories is not always successful. And, despite all, the rain continues to fall on the other side of the world.
