Dorina, a sprightly old lady approaching her centenary, is the last inhabitant of an abandoned village in the heart of the Cilento. She and the otters of the River Calore are the only remaining survivors of a still-untamed land, protected as a National Park, between one of the most unspoilt coastlines of the Tyrrhenian Sea and the agricultural plain. For the first time in a century, high up on a pylon, a stork is nesting.
