In the Tuscan hills of northern Italy lies a town that has not changed for centuries: San Gimignano. Here a vast colony of jackdaws builds nests in the famous medieval towers that characterize the town. Rather than describe the biological behavior of this bird community, we chose to dwell on the unusual story of a little jackdaw that fell from its nest and was raised by a man. The story is a homage to Konrad Lorenz and his love for these animals, of whom he wrote so well.
